About Me:

I would describe myself as an easygoing, friendly, and kind individual. I consider myself to be intelligent, open-minded, sincere, and practical. I'm not judgmental, and am very accepting towards others. Due to that, I have friends from all walks of life, and can find a way to connect with all of them. I'm an extremely loyal and dependable friend. I love people and new experiences, and like to live in the here-and-now.

I really enjoy traveling, and have traveled extensively over the last few years. I love good music, good company, and outdoor activities (such as ice skating, biking, hiking, boating, etc). While I enjoy going "out" (to concerts, musicals, movies, anything), I am also perfectly happy spending time relaxing and chatting at home with my nearest and dearest.

As much as I value education and knowledge, family has always been and always will be the first priority in my life. I always make a point of finding time for doing the things I enjoy and spending quality time with people who I care about. I have a BA in Arts Management (graduated 2011), and am currently working as an Event Coordinator at the YJP in Manhattan. I am planning on continuing my education in the near future.

Looking for:

I'm looking for someone with a similar lifestyle to mine. Chabad is a big part of my life (I went to Chabad schools and seminary, and now live in Crown Heights and work for a Chabad-run organization), so I'm looking for someone who can share that connection, yet is relaxed and more "modern" in lifestyle.

I hope to meet someone who is kind, chivalrous, is worldly and open-minded, and loves to laugh. Someone who sets high standards for himself in all aspects of life (such as treating others with respect, being reliable, etc). Would definitely have to be intelligent, and completed (or working on) higher education, and aims to have a professional career. Someone who is easygoing, and would enjoy occasional trips to movies, concerts, etc.

Most importantly, I am looking for someone who seeks to have a warm, accepting home filled with Yiddishkeit, laughter, and above all love and happiness.

Family:

My parents were both raised in secular homes. Before moving to the states about 20 years ago, they were both university professors in Russia. When I was 3 years old, my family moved to Pittsburgh, PA and soon became frum through Chabad. My parents remain close to Chabad to this day, though they are closer to Modern Orthodox in both outlook and lifestyle. My father is now a research scientist and my mother is a social worker.

I have three sisters: two older and one younger. My older sisters over 30 and are not religious; my younger sister and I went through the whole Chabad system and consider ourselves to be modern Chabad girls.
